1. [] Comment. []
YEH was the most important man in Central and South China, with LIN Piao in Peiping entrusted with the task of organizing an Asian People's Army. TENG Tzu-hui, LIN's close associate and former acting chairman of the Central-South Administrative Committee, had been transferred to the post of vice-chairman of the Central State Planning Committee. YEH became dominant after long conflict with the internationalist clique and held the following positions: acting commander of the Fourth Field Army and the Central-South Military District; acting chairman of the Central-South Administrative Committee; and chairman of the Kwangtung provincial government.
